To Whom It May Concern:

I am writing on behalf of my colleague and friend, Dr. Larry C. Jensen. Dr. Jensen was Professor of Psychology at Brigham Young University for many years and is now an emeritus member of the faculty. As a full-time faculty member he taught university courses in adolescent psychology, sex and gender roles, and child psychology every year. He has also written and published numerous articles and chapters for books on the topic, including a small trade book and that he and I authored on the development of prosocial emotions in children.

I recommend Dr. Jensen to you. He is a fine man of high moral integrity, thoroughly acquainted with his field of study, and a skilled teacher. Please do not hesitate to call if I can answer any further questions.

Sincerely,

To Whom It May Concern:

I am writing in support of Larry Jensen, a colleague and friend for approximately eight years. I have worked closely with him, having the pleasure of his considerable presence in our doctoral program at Brigham Young University.

I have always enjoyed working with Larry. His insights into academic matters have always impressed me. He clearly has a unique and, I believe, profound perspective on psychology and, particularly, human relationships. I am especially struck by his recent writings on parenting. They are, at once, practical and inspirational.

However, as much as these insights have impressed me, his humility and caring have impressed me more. We served for many years together in a discussion group. More than once, I have seen Larry say something self-effacing that not only facilitated this discussion but also went to the heart of the matter. This humility and lack of pretense are the qualities I most admire in him.

Larry also cares deeply for people. It seems that most of his actions can be understood in this light. He cares for students so he is an outstanding teacher; he cares for parents (and their children) so he writes seminal books on parenting and childhood development (not to mention being an outstanding parent himself). His manner is also striking in this regard. Larry is nothing if not warm and compassionate. When this manner and caring are put together with his considerable social skills and insights, it is the potent combination of a highly effective and loving individual.

Sincerely,

Re: Larry C. Jensen

I am pleased to write in behalf of Larry Jensen. I served as his department chair from 1978 to 1988. I found Larry to be a productive scholar, personable, and tractable. He continuously was active with his research interests and was able to involve several students in his projects. For years he represented the Department of Psychology as our representative to the campus library. During his tenure psychology holdings increased significantly through his efforts.

Larry has been a valued colleague in our department. Throughout his years at BYU he was a hard-worker, related well with others, and was always pleasant.

I can recommend Larry Jensen to you and can do so without hesitancy.

Sincerely,

I am pleased to write a letter of recommendation in behalf of Dr. Larry C. Jensen. I had the pleasure of being a colleague of his for over three decades. During one decade of that time I was his department chair. I have always enjoyed Larry very much both as a colleague and as a friend. He is a very capable individual. He is congenial and caring. His research and writing have been very extensive, and have been received very well in the profession. He possesses the highest degree of ethics and is a very responsible person. I can recommend him with equivocation or hesitation.
